

DOING REAL GOOD

– the creative challenges of the community sector in an era of cutbacks and austerity

A ONE-DAY WORKSHOP WITH VIVIAN HUTCHINSON

In these hard times of cutbacks and austerity measures affecting all areas of community action ... how can we renew our commitment to the insights and creativity that our community sector contributes to New Zealand ?

“Doing Real Good” is an in-depth workshop led by Vivian Hutchinson which examines the current state of our community sector and the general climate that our work for the common good is operating within. It also encourages participants to look at specific strategies for the resilience and regeneration of community initiatives at this time.

The workshop reflects on the impact of funding, engagement, identity and perseverance in reaching our community development goals. It looks at how community organisations are coping with the current era of cut-backs and austerity, and how we can foster greater creativity, innovation and entrepreneurship in all our activities. The workshop also outlines a set of specific strategies for the renewal of ourselves and our social, economic, environmental and cultural initiatives.

It includes many examples from the work Vivian Hutchinson has been doing with employment and job creation initiatives, community and economic development programmes, the New Zealand Social Entrepreneur Fellowship and Community Taranaki. It also includes plenty of opportunities for participants to share on their own stories, insights and experience and aspirations for “doing real good” in our communities today.
