A BRIEFING WITH VIVIAN HUTCHINSON

How do we reinvigorate or reinvent the community groups we will need in the next generation?

This briefing is for people who are interested in the details of the activities and strategies of the Community Taranaki initiative which aims to foster more active citizenship and generous engagement on our social, economic, environmental and cultural challenges. Community Taranaki was co-founded by Vivian Hutchinson and is a citizen-led approach to community development. This initiative has three main activities:

A Masterclass for Active Citizenship, which is a series of eight workshops and community conversations, held over a four month period, aimed at building an infrastructure of public intelligence about how communities heal, awaken and thrive.

A Social Innovation and Community Action Incubator, which has been created to support people starting up new community projects, or looking to regenerate existing ones.

Community Circles, which are held every three months. These are facilitated conversations between active citizens gathered from a wide diversity of sectors, activities and passions.

The briefing gives examples of how these activities work, an outline of the content of the Masterclass and Incubator sessions, and details of how the workshops and events are organised and funded. Vivian Hutchinson also shares insights into what he has learned so far in establishing these initiatives.
